Now That You See It

You saw it.

Maybe just once.

Maybe clearly. Maybe not.

But something changed.

Even if you didn’t say it out loud.

You can look away.

But you know it’s there now.

The first time is quiet.

The second time is different.

You don’t need to explain it to know you saw it.

The question isn’t “is it real?”

The question becomes—what do you do with having seen it?

Now that you see it—

you carry it with you.
